POSSE HUNTS FOR THOMAS MORRISON

Alleged Triple Murderer, Though Seen Often, Eludes Bloodhounds and Poses Easily.

ROBS FARMERS EVERY DAY

Forces Them to Feed Him and Then Takes Their Horses to Aid Him in Flight.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.
OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 21.—The hunt of the posse in Webster County for Thomas Madison, charged with triple murder, is beginning to resemble the famous pursuit of the bandit Tracy.

They are scouring the locality where Madison was last seen. Two packs of bloodhounds at times caught the trail, but the supposed murderer was cunning enough to make Little Blue river, which he frequently crosses, to throw the hounds off the scent.

Madison is becoming the terror of the county.

Following the panting hounds, the determined farmers have discovered places in the cornfield where Madison stopped to eat and rest.

Last night, driven to desperation, he boldly invaded the dwelling of Farmer Gibson, six miles northwest of Cowles.

With a pistol he compelled Mrs. Gibson to give him bread and meat.

He eluded his pursuers when capture was imminent, stopped a youth in a buggy and compelled him to drive a mile in another direction.

On the Partington farm, northwest of Cowles, Madison was haggling with Partington over his compensation for a team and horse when the pursuers appeared on a hill a half mile away.

Madison plunged into a cornfield and crossed the river, and 20 minutes later, not a trace of him could be found.

A special from Lawrence says Madison told Farmer McCloskey up for a team and was seen at Guide Rock driving at breakneck speed.

Madison is charged with the murder of two women and a girl in Kansas, the cause being the refusal of one of the women to marry him.

CITY NEWS.

The Military Department of the CRAWFORD STORE is certainly turning out one of the Handsomest hats to be seen this side of New York, and the prices are most moderate. Hats for all occasions.

TURNERS PASS MILESTONES.
Northwest and South St. Louis Societies Observe Festivals.

Two Turner societies in South St. Louis celebrated Sunday with gymnastic programs and banquets. The South St. Louis gymnastic society members met at their hall at Tenth and Carroll streets on the thirty-fourth anniversary of the founding of the society. Two charter members, Tony Faust and Francis P. Becker, were present. Mr. Becker and Judge William Zachritz made addresses.

The tenth anniversary was celebrated by the Southwest Turnverein society at Potomac street and Ohio avenue. The Rock Springs, Concordia and St. Louis Turnvereins were guests.

STRAUSS & STUMER'S

Display of Imported Hats.

One of the most beautiful displays of millinery is being shown this week by Strauss & Stumer. Crowds of ladies have stood for hours gazing at the beautiful millinery display in their show windows, corner Broadway and St. Charles. The store itself has been transformed into a veritable garden, forming a most attractive setting for the exquisite wares on exhibition. Among them are models from design in Paris, London and New York, besides lungeria; his original designs. In fact it is hardly possible to go through this immense stock of 500 trimmed hats and discriminate between imported hats and those made by American artists, besides this large display of trimmed hats all the newest shapes and materials of the season are being shown.

This display will continue the entire week and should be seen by every lady desiring to be in touch with the latest edicts of fashion.

Rev. Dr. Williamson Will Remain.
Rev. Dr. W. J. Williamson has announced that he will not leave his present church, the Third Baptist Church of St. Louis, to accept a tempting call from Boston. During a trip East last July, Dr. Williamson made a deep impression upon the congregation of Tremont Temple and efforts have been made since then to secure his services.

BOY WAIF SAYS HE WAS DRIVEN FROM HOME; LIVES IN GOODS BOX

Little Boy Runs Away With His Dog Jack While the Night Is Dark and "Hustles" for Himself.

A little bit of a boy lay asleep in a dry goods box with a small black dog in his arms. The faint gray of dawn stole into the alley, and the air was sharp. The little boy shivered in his sleep and clasped the dog closer to him.

The watchman on his rounds shot a flash of light from his lantern into the box and discovered his lodgers. He looked at them for several minutes, and said: "Poor little chap; lucky little dog." He was undecided whether to wake the boy and send him on his way, or let him sleep.

The boy muttered in his sleep and when the watchman touched him he awoke with a cry and said: "Please don't strike me again."

That settled it with the watchman. The boy was dreaming, and the touch upon his shoulder brought the climax. He was suffering again in his sleep the tortures he had experienced while awake when he was aroused and crawled out of the box.

"So you're back again," said Watchman George Johns. "I thought you were going home."

"I couldn't do it," answered the boy.

"But you can't go on this way," the watchman said. "Soon it will be too cold to sleep out of doors at night. What are you going to do then?"

"I don't know," the boy replied.

The watchman took the boy to the police station at Seventh and Carr streets to see what could be done with him and the dog followed contentedly behind.

To the sergeant the boy said that his name was Frank George and that he was 11 years old. To be sure he did not look it, he was so small, but for all that he is a smart-boy and talks like a good boy.

"I believe you've run away from home," said the big policeman looking down at him kindly. "Come, now, tell me all about it."

Says She Didn't Want Him Around.

"Well," the boy began, "I did run away from home. I couldn't stand it there no longer, and that's the truth. I used to live in Brentwood, out in the country, with father and his wife. Father's name is Michael George and he's a motorman on the Suburban line. When mother died my troubles began. Father married again and she didn't treat me right. I was always scolded and sometimes I was beaten. She didn't want me around."

"About five weeks ago," she sent me for milk and made me late for school. I was always late for school because 'she' kept me at work, and when I got there the teacher scolded me. So that morning I just made up my mind that as I was not wanted around anyway, I just leave. I waited around until 1 o'clock that night, then I called Jack, that was my dog, and we started out to make our own living. We walked along the Missouri Pacific tracks towards St. Louis. I tell you it was fine, being free."

"Say, did you ever hear of Dick Whittington?"

"No," answered the sergeant, "who was he?"

"He was a poor boy who ran away to London and became Lord Mayor. He had a cat with him. I played I was Dick, and Jack he was the cat. I don't know how he liked it, because he's just crazy at cats."

"Well, we walked along until we came to a brickyard and I found a shed open and we got into it and laid down and slept. We was up early and walked on and on until we came into St. Louis. It felt good now to be scolded, although we both of us kind of wished we had some of the breakfast that was being cooked at home."

"We got away downtown at last and I asked a newsboy where was the Post-Dispatch. He was going there himself for his 'Middays' and he took me along. I didn't have no money, but the man asked me some questions and he let me have some papers. I took them out and sold them and that day I paid him back and made 25 cents."

"That night I bought some cold meat and bread, and Jack and I started out to find a home. We found an empty box in

PURE WATER FIGHT IS NOW RENEWED

Attorney-General's Own Daughter a Victim of Conditions Upon Which Missouri Makes War.

TAKING EVIDENCE IN CHICAGO

Mr. Crow, Encouraged by Ruling of Supreme Court, Feels Confident of Victory Over Illinois.

Depositions for the defense are being taken at Chicago today in the famous drainage canal case, upon the outcome of which rests the question as to whether Chicago has the right to dump its sewage into the Illinois river, whence it finds its way into the Mississippi.

Attorney-General Crow and his assistant, Sam B. Jeffries, chief counsel for the Illinois Central Railroad Co., represent Missouri, and James Todd, counsel for the sanitary division of Chicago, and Judge William M. Springer are looking after the defense.

A daughter of Mr. Crow is now critically ill as a result, physicians say, of drinking bad water. The little one is suffering from typhoid fever and Mr. Crow says there are 500 similar cases in St. Louis.

"We have no idea," said the attorney-general, "of the vast amount of harm to the health of the people that has resulted from this impure water supply. It has not only caused an epidemic of typhoid, but it has practically perpetuated that disease among us."

The hotels and restaurants should be compelled to do so. This is not idle talk. It is the solemn fact, as established by this inquiry, and the health of the people become alive to existing conditions the sooner will they take steps to prevent this evil."

Crow Is Confident of Final Victory.

The attorney-general does not think the drainage canal case will be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States for several months, and he does not look for a decision until late in 1934. He is confident of victory. He has gathered evidence from all parts of the world on the question of sewage and water supply and this has been incorporated in the voluminous testimony already taken.

The Supreme Court is asked to grant an injunction to restrain the canal people from dumping the sewage into the Illinois river.

The Supreme Court sustained the attorney-general a year ago by deciding that the controversy could be decided on its merits and that, therefore, the admission of testimony showing that impure water supply exists in St. Louis in consequence of the canal is competent.

Missouri has expended $125,000 to prosecute the case, while Illinois has appropriated $150,000 in defense.

Dr. Brown Will Lecture.

While in Chicago, Dr. John Young Brown of the St. Louis City Hospital will lecture before the American Association of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, of which he is a member. He will speak of the treatment of knife and gunshot wounds.
